Healthy & Happy Families Start Here

A GUIDE FOR PARENTS AND CHILDREN TO EXPLORE TOGETHER

INCLUDES:
- A spiritual leader’s advice for mental wellness
- Helpful tips for talking & listening to one another
- Fun games & activities for the whole family
This fotonovela is one in a series of three, which are designed to increase awareness of mental health and wellness options in our families and communities. The series includes characters that may represent someone you know: a mother realizing the impact of her negative words; a father who doesn’t know how to manage his stress; and a mother who turns to her faith leader for mental health guidance. These storylines are familiar to us because we know many people living with mental health challenges right now. They are our family members, friends, co-workers and neighbors, and they can live full and productive lives, not defined by their condition.

This fotonovela series is a project of the California Mental Health Services Authority (CalMHSA), an organization made up of county governments working to improve mental health outcomes for individuals, families and communities, and funded by counties through the voter-approved Mental Health Services Act (Prop 63). By creating innovative programs that equip communities with the tools, resources and information they need to foster wellness, Californians are opening their minds to a new understanding of mental health, which is as important as physical health.

You can be part of the solution and show your loved ones that Each Mind Matters:

• Accept people who experience mental health challenges in your family and community
• Support other parents who may be struggling with a mental health challenge in their families
• Teach children that it is unacceptable to disrespect people who are living with mental health challenges

You know, Alma, it's not good to keep all your feelings trapped inside. It's important to talk about it.

With the children and the baby, it's hard to find a second for myself, let alone talk with my husband.

I'm here to help if you change your mind. God wants you to be strong for your family – physically and mentally.

I believe that is true. Thank you, father.

I feel overwhelmed. I'm always tired. I don't have motivation for anything. I thought I could get through this on my own, but I don't think I can.

I'm glad you stopped by, Alma. Tell me what's going on.

So many people love and care for you. We all want to see you get back to your up-beat self... and you will!

When?! I'm so frustrated that I can't snap out of it. I just want to feel like myself again.

Our faith leaders are well positioned to help identify and assist in managing early mental health challenges.

— Dawan Utecht, Mental Health Director, Department of Behavioral Health, Fresno County
Have you considered talking with a therapist?

No, of course not. We all need someone to talk to from time to time.

Do you think I'm crazy?!

I will still be here for your spiritual health but I do think it is wise to talk with a therapist or counselor to tend to your mental health.

I will have to think about this. I thought I could talk with you and my problems would go away.

My husband will think something is wrong with me.

Just as we go to the doctor when we feel physically sick, this is no different. It's about taking care of ourselves.

I wouldn't know where to start.

I have a phone number for our local clinic; there are some good counselors that I trust. I have referred others to them in the past, with great success.

Q: Why is mental health important?
A: Our mental health supports our thinking and feeling, our mood, our ability to relate to others and to function in daily life. Sometimes we experience mental health challenges that disrupt our mental health, which take the form of medical illnesses like depression, anxiety or eating disorders.

Q: How common are mental illnesses?
A: Just like physical illnesses, mental illnesses are very common and nothing to be ashamed of. Research shows 1 in 4 American adults are living with a diagnosable mental illness in any given year. So, it’s almost certain that someone in your family needs your support.

Q: Can mental illnesses be treated?
A: Yes. With appropriate support and treatment, people can improve their symptoms and live happy, full and productive lives.

Q: Is there anything I can do to help if a friend or family member’s mental health is suffering?
A: Yes. Be supportive and encourage the person to see a doctor or counselor. Remind them that there is hope. Speak and act from a place of compassion and acceptance, rather than fear.

Q: How can I support my family’s mental health?
A: To support mental health and prevent mental illness, pay attention to triggers like stress and warning signs such as trouble sleeping or mood swings. Get routine medical care, and seek mental health care when you need it. Finally, take good care of yourself: sleep, healthy eating and regular physical activity are important to mental health and physical health.
Talking about Feelings

Getting to know our feelings can be one of the most confusing parts of growing up. In fact, many of us adults haven’t quite figured them out for ourselves yet! Feelings guide our thoughts and actions, so getting to know them is very important.

DID YOU KNOW?

Everyone has feelings. Some of us try to hide them, but they are always here inside.

Feelings are always changing. Sometimes we are sad. Other times we are happy. Usually, a sad feeling will be replaced by a happy feeling in time.

Our feelings – and other people’s feelings – are true for each of us in this moment. Even if we feel good, we can still accept that our friend or family member might not feel good at the same time. We cannot force ourselves or others to feel a certain way.

If sad feelings stick around too long, we can turn to someone we trust for support. This may be a family member, a friend, a faith leader, a counselor or a doctor.

Talking about feelings is good for our health. It feels good to talk about feeling good and being happy. It may not be so easy to talk about feeling sad, hurt, lonely or stressed, but talking about these feelings is the first step to feeling better.

When we try to hide our feelings or keep them inside, they don’t go away. They get stronger and stronger over time. They start to take control over our words and actions, even when we don’t want them to. By trying to ignore our feelings, we actually give them more power. They can even make us sick! It’s better to let them out by talking about them with people we trust.

THERE ARE MANY WAYS TO TALK ABOUT FEELINGS. SOME ARE HELPFUL, OTHERS ARE HURTFUL.

HELPFUL

- Use sentences that start with “I feel”
- Make observations: “The dirty laundry is on the floor.”
- Name your feelings, and be specific: “I feel frustrated when I see clothes on the floor.”
- Express your needs: “I have a need for the house to be tidy, and for everyone to help.”
- Make a request: “Would you be willing to pick up your clothes in the next five minutes?”

HURTFUL

- “You make me feel” or “Because of you”
- Make judgments: “How did I raise such a messy child?”
- Make others responsible for your feelings: “It makes me so mad when you don’t pick up after yourself.”
- Repress your needs: “No one cares about what I want anyway.”
- Make a demand: “Pick up your clothes or no dinner for you tonight!”

HERE ARE WAYS TO BE HELPFUL – NOT HURTFUL – WHEN SOMEONE IS SHARING THEIR FEELINGS WITH US.

HELPFUL

- Listen with attentiveness
- Be respectful
- Show support and compassion
- Acknowledge feelings with “oh” or “I see”
- With young children, give a name to the feeling to help them understand it

HURTFUL

- Interrupt or tell our own story
- Give advice or try to “fix” the feelings
- Criticize or blame
- Deny or ignore feelings
- Label feelings as bad, or tell a child they should not feel them

LET’S PLAY!

Can you draw a happy face?

Or a sad face?

Or a silly face?

Or a surprised face?
NAME THAT FEELING! Cut out each word and put them all in a bag. Each family member will select one word from the bag and silently act out the feeling that word represents using body and facial expressions. Whoever names the correct feeling gets a point! Continue until all feelings are named and add up points to find the winner.
